The five pillars of Destiny afford an intricate mix of the elements which collectively represent the true essence of the spirit of a person. Interpreting the interaction of these elements provides us with a deep understanding of who we are and how it is we do the things we do. There is no judgement in this life. We are who we are as a direct consequence of our time and date of birth.

Every day, month, year and hour have an elemental representation of Heaven and Earth energy. This elemental influence is different every day, month, year and hour so hence there are a multitude of combinations possible which explains how we are all so individual and so different.

I recently had the good fortune to attend a Springsteen concert in Hyde Park, London and never in my life have I witnessed an artist with so much vigour and vitality during a performance that lasted for more than three hours. Bruce's connection to his audience was outstanding and even more incredible was the fact that he didn't stop smiling from beginning to end. This man was definitely at one with his world, certainly not in it for the money but for the sheer joy in performing and delighting his fans. This has not always been the case as it is public knowledge that The Boss has had to fight his own demons over the years as a consequence of suffering from depression.

Bruce's personal element taken from his day of birth is Yang Fire born in the autumn. This is the element that represents the self. Yang fire is big and bold and likes to shine, however, in the autumn when Bruce was born the natural quality of fire is closing down after the rigours of the summer season and the long hot days and nights. It is therefore vital to see some wood in the chart to sustain this fire and keep it burning. Unfortunately there is no wood in Bruce's chart so this suggests a life of fending for the self, nothing has been handed to this man on a plate and he has had to fight for his right. The fact that there is only one representation of the self element in the chart too further endorses this strong sense of self reliance.

THE FIVE ELEMENT CYCLE

The weakness in this chart comes in the support and self elements; in fact everything about Bruce Springsteen is give, give, give. The dominant energy is in the earth element which represents his career so this is how Bruce is so comfortable pursuing a job that he loves, in fact I would say this is his raison d'être. He is like a willow tree that dances in the wind and has simply followed his passion and his dream.

The energy the career produces is the money energy. The fact that there is only one representation of money in the chart makes this energy pure and the fact that this representation sits in the month pillar means that it has a very strong presence as the month pillar is the leader of a chart. Bruce will therefore be very confident around the money energy but actually it means little to him.

In fact Bruce's chart is known as a Special Form in that he has followed the stronger energy of the chart. These charts are rare and belong to very unique individuals; an ordinary person cannot handle them. It is therefore not surprising that he has become such an outstanding success in the music industry. The fact that his career is represented by the earth element, which in turn produces the metal element, and the fact that metal in general represents sound and music it therefore further explains Bruce's astounding success as a musician and song writer.

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN'S SUPPORTING ELEMENTS ARE EARTH AND METAL ELEMENTS TO AVOID ARE WOOD AND FIRE

Bruce's passion for music will have come in at an early age with yang metal already showing in his chart at the age of 10. This influence continues through his teens and progresses into a career in his early 20s up to the age of 30 when the money energy will have really started to show. For the next 25 years career was everything to him and even though there were potential challenges from 40-44 they were minimised by the support of his wife, family and friends.

Bruce is now 63 years of age and he will do well to take care of his health as he is coming into fate periods represented by his avoid elements. His home suits him and he is comfortable there so he will benefit from spending time on his land.

This is the law of nature
